Stars fly in for Algarve première of 'The Right Juice' (/features/art-culture/3096-stars-fly-in-for-right-juice-premiere)

Ellie Chidzey and Mark Killeen (pictured) are flying to Faro at the end of August for the Algarve première of The Right Juice to be screened in Faro.

The independent film is a milestone in the Algarve's fledgling movie industry and shows what can be done with zero budget and 100% willpower.

Well known Algarve resident turned independent film producer BJ Boulter commented that people just can't believe an entire film can be made from start to finish through donations, gifts, help and crowdfunding.

'The Right Juice' was screened on March 30th 2014 at the Atlanta Film Festival in the States and the August screening in the Algarve marks the film's much anticipated Algarve début.

In an interview published in The Resident, Boulter commented, "No one in the Portuguese film industry could quite believe we could make a film the way we did."

The English language film was shot entirely in Algarve and follows a young London banker who, after he loses his own, friends' and family money in an investment gone wrong, travels to his decrepid cottage in the Algarve and and decides to plant oranges. Everything changes when he strikes oil instead of water.

The film is timely as it pits the lure of oil money against a more traditional way of life in the beauty of the Algarve.

The cast included many well-known Algarve names including Michael Reeve, the chief executive of Afpop, in a defining role as a baddy where character acting is taken to an entirely new level.
